My Dearest Sweetheart,

Today is the day when many experts predicted the war would ~~see~~ end but with only a few hours left before the birth of a new day I'm very doubtful if it will come true.

It's after dark now and I can use a flashlight as I'm in a building and no light can be seen from the outside.

Received your lovely letter, of Aug 28th, yet regretful news of knowing you had a cold and was unable to attend the picnic with Bobby and Mike. Hope your illness is restored to normal and please, watch your health. Advice you also given me. What picnic were you supposed to see.

Mike wasn't supposed to tell you of my meeting Julie as I stated because it wasn't going to occur but what I attempted in telling him I didn't particularly want you to know because you would have only worried and kind of thing that were happening to me which in reality aren't so especially when you read the news of the invasion of Southern France. Darling, I give you the news as it occurs so you won't be puzzled and that is that okay?

I love you darling and miss you immensely Ben
