Hello My Darling,

For the first time since last week I've seen progress made on the novelty box that I'll be sending you in a few days. There has been another change, instead of the planned mirror in the inside back cover it has the same lining as the inside body of the box. That job has been finished and I consider it to be a good job. This evening I took the box to the painter and tomorrow evening he should be finished but the wet paint will require approximately two days to dry therefore I won't be mailing you the box before Wednesday or Thursday. The box won't have the lock on it but when I return I'll take care of that or honey if you think that you can handle the job by bringing it to a man that can place the lock in for you then it's okay with me. When you finally see the box you will understand why the lock is so important and not just the idea of having a little security for any personal items you might select to put into the box.

After I saw the painter I went to the movies and saw a picture that I was most anxious to see, but I would have enjoyed it much better with you sitting next to me darling. The movie playing was "Valley for Decision" and while I enjoyed the picture the book held my interest more.

Can you understand this letter darling cause if I get any complaints I'll have to resume my handwriting. As soon as we arrive at our new location I'll try and locate a typewriter machine repairman and see if he can't fix the machine.

The weather was fairly nice today and this afternoon I went for a short swim down by the creek.

That's all for today. I constantly miss our talkative moments together and all other elements that spells, I love you so very much,

Forever yours, xxx
Ben
